PUSH – Living in the Hyper Information Age

Push messages, news updates, social bots and hate comments – at times, it's pretty difficult for us to interpret the data sent to our smartphones, sometimes at minute intervals. In recent months, this clamorous, jarring and accelerated spiral of communication has reached new heights. "Alternative" truths and fake news have become commonplace, and even the highest political offices are no exception. What is the effect of the many tweets posted by a certain Donald Trump: fakes become facts. Constant repetition transforms half-truths into supposed certainties that are likely to initiate some changes in the real world. But we are not only interested in the disinformation created by the media storm. What does this constant growth of information mean for our everyday lives? That is the key question.

Featuring contemporary artistic positions and accompanying talks, EMAF sheds light on the topic in all its facets. The festival has a new layout for its 30th edition. All remains different behind it. We look forward to spending five fantastic days with old friends and new visitors, to experiencing a great deal of input and bright ideas, in short: we wish you – and ourselves – an exciting time at EMAF No. 30!

Exhibition

Information pressure and media information overload, datafication and euphoria in the maelstrom of images – the digital transformation of all areas of life breeds both fear and fascination. Besides enabling us all to further our knowledge and to educate ourselves, the internet also facilitates echo chambers where opinions are confirmed. Do we need the truth police to clean up fakes and hates, or would we be better off with truth skills? Does digital consensus offer a better form of democracy, or are artificial intelligences set to take on government functions soon? The digital image changes how we relate to the body, empathy and violence. Those active in the data room are traded by the data industry. And to what extent can people's individual interests assert themselves in the attention economy?

These are just some of the thematic areas and issues that will be addressed in the exhibition. The artists do not provide definitive answers. But they do give an indication of whether reality is discernible behind the images, or which possibilities of reflection, critical focus and societal relevance arise – and what potential of aesthetic enrichment is opened up by digital media.

Media Campus INIT

As a platform for emerging young artists, Media Campus INIT showcases contemporary work on the topic PUSH | Living in the Hyper Information Age. In their pieces, students and graduates critically examine information overload and our existence in the present-day virtual, physical, public and private sphere of life. The works, ranging from sound-producing objects to visual artefacts, expand the media space, complement it, and encourage interactive dialogue between visitors and installations. From the 400+ films submitted, the INIT team has also compiled four thematic programmes that will be screened in the Lagerhalle. (↳ see film programme)

Once again, this year also features performances in the Offspace and an OpenStage where young artists can talk about their creations.

Music / Performance

The performances, AV shows and concerts staged at EMAF are a clear demonstration that media art goes beyond filmic and sculptural forms. Each day of the festival has a programme of its own, reflecting the diversity of EMAF at a number of venues in the city. The range extends from fantastic imagery and bleak visions of the future to a climbing experience at the boulder wall that opens up new perspectives with motion tracking to AUGMOUNTAIN.

The performance Entropie by Wolfgang Spahn will be the opening of the audiovisual salon. The Saturday event Night Shift, which presents exceptional live Legowelt, Robert Lippok and Colin Benders will be an extraordinary experience.

Film Programme

The film programme in the 30th year of the festival ranges from colourful music videos to structural experimental films, from traditional video art to carefully researched documentary films, from personal reflection to social discourse. The film committee has selected 132 films from the 2,000 or more that were submitted – among them seven world premieres (WP), 21 European premieres (EP) and 42 German premieres (GP).

This year's topic is reflected not only in the three programmes PUSHED, PUSH FORWARD and PUSH BACK, but will crop up again and again in all of the other programmes. What is true and what is important: Trump's tweet of the day or the "fake news" created by the (as yet) liberal press? In entertaining, sometimes confusing, but always exciting programmes, the filmmakers show us how media are transformed into true art.

Once again, many of the creators from all over the world will visit the festival to present and discuss their films. And in the meantime, two juries will select the artists who will be presented with an award to take home with them at the Lagerhalle on Saturday evening. As ever, admission to the award ceremony is free of charge.
